Understanding Parksville's Fire Service

This is the second article in a series about the PVFD and is in response to a recent survey where residents indicated a need for more information. The department looks forward to receiving your comments – stop by the fire hall or email info@parksville.ca.

The Parksville Volunteer Fire Department responds to a variety of fire and emergency related calls for service. The major types of calls include alarms, motor vehicle incidents, medical calls (first response and ambulance assistance) and burning complaints. The majority of calls received by the department are through the North Island 911 emergency dispatch system.

ALARMS - PVFD responds to all reported residential and commercial alarm calls, treats all alarm calls as potential fires and responds by dispatching a duty officer and a fire engine. All available volunteers report to the fire hall when calls are received and if more resources are necessary, the duty officer will immediately request additional fire crews, apparatus or other support.

Depending on the situation, commercial alarms may receive additional resources. Certain facilities (such as care homes or large hotels), due to the large number of individuals that may require assistance, will trigger an automatic aid response from surrounding departments.

MOTOR VEHICLE INCIDENTS - A duty officer will respond to motor vehicle incidents where there is no indication of the need for extrication or of fire. The duty officer will assess the situation for hazards such as leaking fluids or potential for fire and provide assistance with site safety. If other resources are required, the duty officer will request additional support in the form of appropriate equipment and personnel.

Through a mutual aid agreement, the PVFD also provides rescue and extrication services for the Parksville fire service area and by request from neighbouring departments. When automobile extrication services are provided outside the boundaries of the area, the PVFD receives some reimbursement from the Province.

MEDICAL CALLS - The PVFD responds to select medical calls to supplement and support the ambulance service. Although BC Ambulance receives more than 2000 calls in the Parksville fire service area each year, the department only responds to those medical calls which meet criteria as laid out by department operational guidelines. The PVFD responds to calls in which:

- Individuals involved are in imminent danger of death or there has been extreme trauma.
- Additional personnel can improve the quality of medical care.
- Ambulance response time is more than 15 minutes.
- Ambulance service requests assistance.

For example, the PVFD responds to medical calls involving cardiac arrest. This is a situation where the individual involved is at great risk of serious injury or death. Because performing CPR is a physically strenuous activity, trained fire department personnel on the scene may relieve paramedics, ensuring consistent effective administration of CPR. If ambulance response time will be greater than 15 minutes, the PVFD will respond to medical calls to stabilize the patient and provide first response medical care.

BURNING COMPLAINTS - Burning in Parksville is regulated by "Outdoor Burning Bylaw, 2007, No. 1428". Bylaws are implemented at the municipal government level by Council and are generally enforced by City bylaw compliance officers. The PVFD works closely with the bylaw compliance department to respond to burning complaints, often responding in the evenings and on weekends when bylaw compliance may not be on duty. Generally the fire department responds to first-time complaints with the goal of educating residents. If multiple burning complaints are received from the same property, bylaw compliance will assume responsibility and may take additional steps to gain compliance, including the issuance of fines.

OTHER EMERGENCIES - As well as the emergencies mentioned in this article, the PVFD responds to a wide variety of other emergencies such as brush fires, natural gas and propane incidents, hazardous materials incidents, structure fires, technical rescue incidents such as confined space, and many other types of public service requests.

The term "fire department" is a traditional term - in reality, the PVFD is an emergency services department with a wide-ranging mandate.
